Declaration of Purpose and Peace

By Tyson Jay Palmer

I, Tyson Jay Palmer, set forth this declaration as an offering of peace, reflection, and creative vision.
The King's Doctrine is not a call to separation, but an invitation to unity — a way of understanding that life, art, and spirit are expressions of one continuous truth.

At its heart stands the conviction that the victory of love and truth has already been accomplished; that humanity may now rest in the completed work of the Divine. Through this recognition, we are released from the endless struggle for worth and return to the harmony from which we first came.

In the arts I compose, the writings I release, and the disciplines I pursue, I seek to embody this principle: that every note, every motion, every breath may testify to peace fulfilled. The discipline of music and the discipline of the body are joined as one act of devotion — the shaping of form in service of spirit.

This teaching belongs to no single religion or nation. It is offered freely as a philosophy of restoration — to remind all people that divine love is living, present, and whole. In faith, reason, and artistry, we may together reflect the light that already shines.

Let this be my word: that through grace, understanding, and creative purpose, the world may remember its peace.
